Below: This week we shared different Reader's Theaters with the class.

Next week we will be taking some of our required mid-year testing from MDE. These are fairly long, but I am always proud of the effort that goes forth!

Reading: Next week will be a Unit Review week and we will take our Unit 3 Test. We will review text features all week. This will help us in creating our non-fiction writing.

Spelling: Due to it being a unit review week, we will have no new spelling list next week. We will review patterns that make the same sound, but are different.

Math: This week we finished up with our subtraction regrouping unit. Students are really doing great and working so hard. We also started learning about measurement. This is a nice break from tough concepts, so we can spend time practicing subtraction too.

Language/Writing: We will continue with verbs next week. This week we started writing our non-fiction animal books. Students researched facts and started grouping them in categories.

Social Studies: We will continue discussing communities and how they work together.

Celebration: This week we got our 20th compliment on our compliment board! Every time our class gets a compliment from an adult (besides me!) we add a compliment. Now that we filled up our board we will celebrate with an ice cream sundae party and start working toward a new reward.
